The Jaybird Protested

SUNDAY afternoon we sat in our boudoir (being a French word pronounced too-doo, meaning "a lady's room") reading one of our favorite daily papers. Our eyes had fallen upon the section prepared by Olin Miller, entitled "Quaint Tales from Georgia Quills," and we had read as far down the first column as "Jaybird" when there was a knock at the door. A full grown jaybird sat on a limb and was in a high state of excitement, as we could know from his continued repetition of his shrill protest. His top-knot was in battle, and our mind was diverted for the moment as we watched him.

After a minute or two the bird flew away, and we turned back to our reading. Olin Miller was quoting a Charleston editor as saying that jaybirds carry rocks to satan on Sundays, and also Albert Hardy's rejoinder: "There is a jaybird around my house who is on the squawking job every blessed morning shortly after daybreak. If he or it or they ever daybreak, I'll, I don't miss them; because both Fridays and Sundays they are on the job, and I am the one who throws rocks, that is, if I am up and have rocks."

And then we knew the jaybird was striving to divert our mind before we read Miller's philosophy, which cannot be disputed. The jaybird ought to go to hell on Friday, if not earlier in the week, and stay there, but he doesn't.

Jay Fever a Benefactor

WE ARE about to be forced to agree that the poet knew what he was saying when he penned the thought, "It's an ill wind that blows nobody's nose."

We have long had an antipathy to hay fever; that is, we recognized it as an unmitigated evil so far as we were personally concerned. We were loathed upon it as myth in the mind of high-brows. Finally it came home to us, and we began to blow our own nose in recognition of its reality, if not necessity.

But we've been educated on the subject; we went to school and paid for our lesson, and we'll admit that there is virtue even in hay fever—if you are at the right end of the receiving line.

Personally we've had it for three weeks; kept a pocketful of damp handkerchiefs stuffed here and there about our person. In the meantime a hole grew in the pants pocket in which men are supposed to hide their small change from their wives, and it was no longer possible to put silver in our pants pocket. So we were forced to place it in our coat along with the damp handkerchiefs. There we had our small accumulation last Monday as we rode in the back seat of Leodel Coleman's car enroute to Macon. At Dublin he stopped to take on a youngster going to a school in North Georgia. He was perfectly genteel in his appearance, and we almost guessed right when we suspected he was a ministerial student. He was enroute to Rhinehart College, which is a Methodist institution.

We slipped over and gave the lad half the back seat. At Macon when he thanked us for the ride and got out of the car, there was a small smattering of silver right where he had been sitting. We called his attention to it, and he gathered it up with manifest surprise. He didn't understand how it could be his. But hadn't he been sitting right there all the way from Dublin? Whose else could it be? At the lunch counter ten minutes later we reached for the silver we had been carrying in our coat, and it was gone. We were destitute. We had pulled the silver out with our handkerchief because of hay fever, and had forced it on the boy because of our own sense of honesty. He had taken it when we insisted it was his.

And thus we have come to admit of hay fever, "It's an ill wind that blows nobody's nose."

Surrender Without a Fight?

IN AN ADDRESS prepared in advance and delivered before an audience at Des Moines, Iowa, Thursday evening following the world-wide broadcast of the President, Charles A. Lindbergh charged three designing groups with responsibility for the present threat of involvement in war. These three forces named were "The British, the Jewish, and the Roosevelt administration." He said:

"They planned, first, to prepare the United States for foreign war under the guise of American defense; second, to involve us in war step by step, without our realization; third, to create a series of incidents which would force us into the actual conflict."

The force of his logic clearly meant that Lindbergh's philosophy is that war can be avoided provided a nation does not care to defend her most valued rights. Carried further, the assumption is that Lindbergh intends to accuse Great Britain, the Jews and the President with planning and committing the atrocities which have been committed by the German navy upon the high seas, the legitimate pathways of every nation.

The last quoted words of his address were these:

"If any one of these groups—the British, the Jewish, or the administration—stops agitating for war, I believe there will be little danger of our involvement."

A few minutes before the one-hour broadcast Lindbergh was seen as a centerpiece for the table and a three-course dinner was served. Covered were placed for Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Anderson Sr., Mr. and Mrs. W. D. Anderson Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Josh Lanier and Mr. and Mrs. Albert Green. Novelty trays were presented to each couple, each bearing recently married.

Garrison Speaks To Statesboro Jaycees

With the largest attendance in recent months, the Junior Chamber of Commerce met Thursday evening in its regular meeting, with Bill Garrison, whom all the former T.C. students will remember as "Will Bill" Garrison, as speaker.

The annual Georgia state convention of the Jaycees is being held today, Friday and Saturday in Brunswick. Around twenty of the Statesboro Jaycees are leaving for Greenville this morning to join a motorcade which originated in Atlanta. From Greenville they will go to the convention in a body.

"One peaceful nation after another has refused to look the Nazi's danger squarely in the eye until it actually had them by the throat. The United States will not make that fatal mistake."

"No act of violence or intimidation will keep us from maintaining intact our two bulwarks of defense: First, our line of supply of material to the enemies of Hitler; and second, the freedom of our shipping on the high seas."

"We have sought no shooting war with Hitler; we do not seek it now. But neither do we want peace so much that we are willing to pay for it by permitting him to attack our naval and merchant ships while they are on legitimate."

"The sole responsibility rests upon Germany. There will be no shooting unless Germany continues to seek it. This is my obvious duty in this crisis. That is the clear right of this sovereign nation. That is the only step possible if we would keep the tight wall of defense against these attacks. They know that the times call for clear head and fearless hearts."

"And with that strength that comes from a free people conscious of their duty and of the righteousness of what they do, they will, with Divine help and guidance, stand their ground against this latest assault upon their democracy, and their freedom."

And now, whom do we choose to endorse—the quibbling weakling who would have us seek refuge in running to shelter, or that sworn leader who, with all the lights of the past and the present in his mind, speaks for the preservation of these things which make American life worth living?

Shall we surrender without a fight, or shall we stand and preserve our integrity?

EXERCISE CARE TO SAFEGUARD ARMY

Wearing Apparel, Balanced Diet and Livestock Production Are Subject to Expert Tests

The army's testing ground, the vast laboratory that is part of the quartermaster corps, is proving—industry, home economy and agriculture—to be a signal to advance. The quartermaster's testing stations for clothing are watched eagerly by the manufacturers. For it is here that the strength, wear, warmth and water repellency of the clothing of the troops is tested. It is here that quartermaster technicians make sure that the pants and coats and shoes and socks worn by the army's million and one-half troops are good enough to take a lot of punishment.

And from this "lab" new methods of testing fabrics show such a high grade of efficiency that clothing manufacturers are taking a tip from the quartermaster corps. They are adopting the improved procedures in making civilian clothes.

Home economists, too, are kept on their collective toes, advancing with the quartermaster corps. A leader in one of the most far-reaching developments of the past ten years, the development of an adequate, well-balanced diet, the quartermaster corps has a staff of dietetic experts continually working on balanced menus for the army. These experts can disseminate valuable discoveries to professional home economists and housewives.

In agriculture, the quartermaster corps, using the facilities of the department of agriculture, inspects livestock; keeps an eye on the condition of present crops and knows of potential supplies throughout the entire nation.

The farmers are watching the quartermaster corps. The quartermaster is a good farmer. He has to know the best and most economical crops and the best and cheapest livestock. The quartermaster corps frequently is able to relieve surplus marketings. Centers near military posts have been established and bids are issued for fresh fruits and vegetables. Purchases are made through open markets, also, and eventually the buying of home-grown fruits and vegetables for the army will be so facilitated that products from areas which do not contain cantonnements may be secured.

Livestock. The farmers are now acutely on hand for best beef contracts. The weight of lamb bought by the quartermaster is now 60 pounds dressed weight. Economically good army can use heavy lamb and lamb feeders are helped who have found heavy lambs not readily saleable in the commercial field. Again the quartermaster has lowered the average weight of carcass beef. From 600 pounds it has been reduced to 450. Thus cattlemen in the South and West now have an opportunity of disposing of fine yearling beef running about that weight.

In three fields—the industry, home economy and agriculture—the quartermaster corps is pointing the way to greater endeavor for better products and planning. And as a result, the entire standard of living of civilians will be raised—the result of improved methods developed or popularized by the quartermaster corps.

NATIONAL LIVESTOCK AND POULTRY SHOWS SPOTLIGHTED AT FAIR

Prizes This Year Largest in History, Says Mike Benton, Fair President

Improved methods in raising livestock and poultry will be a source of keen interest to thousands of Southeastern farmers at the great Southeastern World's Fair to be held in Atlanta September 26th through October 5th.

"It is our hope to illustrate the importance of livestock and poultry as money crops to farmers," said Mr. Benton, livestock director, the last few years, has attained higher and higher standards of quality in the Southeast.

The Southeast's young people (especially honored at the fair this year) are raising thousands of full-blooded heads of livestock. 4-H members, through government financial aid and advice about improved methods, are producing livestock as perfect as the best.

Home economists, too, are kept on their collective toes, advancing with the quartermaster corps.
